France

Taking your motorhome or campervan to France is a great way to explore another country and culture on a budget. France's infrastructure is well laid out for those travelling by motorhome or campervan, with aires de camping cars and campsites spread across the country.

Aires de Camping Cars

Aires translated to English means “area”, and there are different kinds of aires across France for different purposes (aire de jeux would be a children's play area for example)—make sure you've checked that the aire you're heading to is for campervans and motorhomes before you set off. Aires are a great option for saving some extra money when travelling, as nightly rates rarely exceed around €15, with some even available for free.

Though perfect for an overnight stopover, aires don't usually have many amenities on site—think of them more like large car parks for travellers like yourself—so it depends on what you're looking for. They're a great way of keeping your trips low cost, but it's entirely up to you how you split your time between campsites and aires. It's also good to note that aires are widely available on a first come, first served basis, so it's best to get there early to secure a spot.

Tips for your trip:

"If you're staying for a while, choose your pitch wisely. If we get the chance to pick, we always work out where the sun is coming up and setting. We once parked under a tree in autumn, and now and then, a branch would fall and clatter on the roof along with some acorns. It was a nightmare! I always check the pitch for things like ants and ant nests too."

Best routes to take your motorhome or campervan abroad

There are various ferry routes from around the UK that can take you to places like Ireland, France, or Spain. If you're heading to mainland Europe, there's also the Channel Tunnel, which runs from Folkestone to Calais. The Channel Tunnel is a good option if you're tight on time, as it's only 35 minutes from one end to the other on the LeShuttle. However, be warned—if you're travelling during peak times, you might find a massive queue waiting for you.

Catching a ferry is your other option, and there are multiple ports across the UK that will get you to where you need to go. Some routes are cheaper than others depending on the time of year, but you'll need to factor in the cost of petrol and time lost if you plan to travel further to a cheaper port.

Overall, finding the best and cheapest route for you requires a bit of research and some calculations on your part, as there isn't a one-size-fits-all answer.

Tips for your trip:

"In the past we've taken a trip from Portsmouth to St Malo on the overnight ferry. We then drove the west coast of France, into Spain and drove to the Galicia region of northern Spain. There are some amazing places to visit on that route like La Rochelle and Il de Ray, Biscarosse, Dune Du Pillat, San Sebastian, Bilbao, Gijon, and Santiago De Compostela."

Where to park your motorhome or campervan

In the UK and Ireland

In the UK, there are different rules depending on the local authority regarding where you can and can't park your motorhome or campervan. This includes parking on the street, in car parks, and on public land. Rules and regulations vary by region, so it's always better to check for yourself if things change and always follow parking rules set out in The Highway Code.

In Ireland, you must park your motorhome or campervan in approved campsites unless you have the property owner's permission. For extra peace of mind and to save yourself time looking into where you can safely and legally park, it's best to park up at a campsite or campervan park. This way, you'll have all of the amenities you need at your fingertips, and you won't have anyone knocking on your door in the night and asking you to move on.

In France

The parking rules for motorhomes and campervans in France are similar to those in the UK, although you are legally allowed to park your motorhome or campervan at the side of the road as long as it is designated for parking.

Having said this, don't start getting out your camping table and cookware, as this is prohibited and could get you moved on by the police (not that the side of the road is a great place for a picnic anyway). It's best to only use this rule if you're really in a pinch, as staying at designated campsites and caravan parks is also a lot safer and more secure.

In Spain

When travelling in Spain, you can park your motorhome anywhere as long as the vehicle fits properly into the space. However, you must keep everything contained inside your vehicle (so no pulling out your awning and your chairs when you set up camp). Some places might have signs banning large vehicles, which you will need to abide by, so keep an eye out for those, too.

Tips for your trip:

"We usually try and do a supermarket shop before we reach our destination and check out the car parks on Google to make sure we are not going to have any problems once we get there."

Rich - @onlyvans\_uk Instagram

Taking your motorhome or campervan across borders

Taking your motorhome or campervan across borders may be entirely new to you—if so, there are a few things to bear in mind before you begin travelling. We've already covered documents such as your passport and proof of insurance in our ultimate holiday checklist, but we've added a few more necessary documents, plus an explanation of why and when you'll need them, below. For further advice on driving abroad, please see the GOV.UK website on driving abroad.

Crit' Air Sticker (Clean Air)

This sticker is needed for certain areas of France that are trying to control pollution levels. The sticker puts your vehicle into a category dictated by its emission levels and should be placed on your windscreen.

International Driving Permit

You'll need an International Driving Permit if you still only have a paper licence or if your licence was issued in Jersey, Guernsey, the Isle of Man, or Gibraltar. Otherwise, you're good to go!

UK Sticker

You'll need a UK Sticker applied to the rear of your vehicle if your number plate contains the GB identifier, Euro symbol, the national flag of Scotland, England, or Wales, or has no identifier at all. It's also necessary if you're driving in Spain, Cyprus, or Malta, no matter what's on your number plate.

European Accident Statement (EAS) Form

Although not mandatory, it's a good idea to have an EAS form to hand when travelling through Europe so if the worst were to happen, you can get the necessary details as soon as possible. Your insurance company may be able to provide you with one of these.

Mandatory Equipment

Beyond the documentation you must take, there is also some mandatory equipment you'll need when taking your motorhome or campervan through Europe. This includes a warning triangle, high visibility jackets for each passenger on board, and a first aid kit (mandatory in France, Germany, and Austria).

What can't I take with me to Europe?

There are some restrictions on what you can take into Europe, mainly on food, drink, and plants. Restrictions include:

- ✗ no meat, milk, or any products that contain them (unless its powdered baby milk, baby food, or pet food needed for medical reasons)
- ✗ some plant products are also not allowed (visit the official European Union website for more information)

Tips for your trip:

"Before you cross a border, always make sure you are not taking anything with you that you shouldn't. For example, you shouldn't be taking meat and dairy products to or from the EU and it's easy to forget what you've packed on board during your trip."

Rich - @onlyvans\_uk Instagram

Taking your pet across borders in your campervan or motorhome

What to consider before taking your pet abroad

Firstly, there are a few things to check to ensure you're fully prepared to take your pet with you on your travels. Pets should be over 15 weeks old and comfortable with travelling in a motorhome or campervan, so the journey causes them as little stress as possible.

You'll also need to research where you're going, as different countries and campsites will have varying rules on the animals, or breeds, they allow and how they must be kept on-site. It's a good idea to check how hot it will get while you're there too, so you can decide whether it's better to leave your pet in someone else's care while travelling.

It's your responsibility to ensure that your pets are suitably restrained whilst driving in your motorhome or campervan, for their own safety and so that they don't distract the driver. Further information is available in the Highway Code on driving with pets.

Lastly, make sure you're fully prepared with all of the correct documentation before you go. If you're not properly prepared, you could face delays, and your pets could even be sent back to the country you travelled from, which you'll have to pay for.

What you'll need to take your pet across borders

- ✓ Pet passport (make sure it's filled out correctly)
- ✓ Microchip
- ✓ Rabies vaccination
- ✓ Animal health certificate
- ✓ Tapeworm treatment (Finland, Ireland, Northern Ireland, Norway, Malta)
- ✓ Proof of all of the above
- ✓ A dog tag with the owner's name and address

For further information on taking your pet abroad, please visit the UK Government webpage.

Tips for your trip:

"Make sure you do your research and know exactly what you need before you go. Sometimes the rules can change quite quickly so make sure you have all the relevant paperwork and jabs for your pets. At the same time, don't be afraid to take them! We have seen people take cats, dogs, and know someone who has a pet duck as well. Pets love holidays as much as we do."
